CHAPTER II HISTORY MEDICAL Inspection of Schools was in vogue many years before the trained nurse was engaged in the school work. But even medical inspection has only of recent years come into prominence, and its great public value recognized. For many years social and philanthropic workers for the amelioration and betterment of the conditions of the poor, recognized that they were not making any permanent progress. Large sums of money and much earnest effort produced only passing relief. Any progress toward real improvement could only be looked upon as halting and disappointing. The futility of the methods applied to adults and the practical failure to save men and women from the abyss of drink, crime, and immorality forced the attention of the thoughtful upon the child problem. So social efforts shifted largely from the adult to the child, with the most gratifying results. When the maximum efforts were directed to the physical development of the child, to the preservation of health, and protection from disease, to instruction in personal hygiene and cleanliness, to child games and playgrounds, to the production of healthy, robust childhood, pessimists became optimists, and permanently higher standards of life and conduct seemed to be a reasonable possibility. It was quickly observed that the maximum result could be best obtained through the medium of the school. It is difficult to decide just what country is entitled to the credit of introducing medical inspection of schools. Considerable was done by...
